The Mbosho Estate is named for the village in which it's located, just south of the famous Mount Kilimanjaro. Mbosho is managed by James Powell, a coffee industry veteran who gained experience owning a farm in Zimbabwe. He leases Mbosho's land from the local society and oversees the production and processing of 40 hectares of coffee trees. This lot is washed using large tubs instead of the traditional channels; the estate doesn't have space for large-scale channels often seen at other farms. Once washed, coffee is dried on raised beds and monitored constantly until it reached the appropriate level of moisture.
